

STEVENSON'S WILL.

The efforts to break the will of Governor Charles C. Stevenson, of Nevada, are being pushed with considerable ability. Judge Rising, of Carson City, has been in the city during the past week, hearing testimony on both sides, and the case is attracting as much attention as if the dead Governor had left his one-time fortune of over $1,000,000 to be fought for, instead of the paltry $40,000 to which foolish speculations and bad judgment have whittled the estate. The scandal that attached to the suit is regrettable; the present Mrs. Stevenson was held in high esteem by the people of Nevada, and was a great favorite with society and church people. It was only when the testimony developed some strange and not entirely inexplicable actions on her part that some of her friends drew away from her.

Ten years ago Governor Stevenson was worth a good deal over a million dollars; he had mines, lands and other properties from which he derived a large income. He appeared to be happy in his domestic life, and was greatly respected. His fate brought him into the presence of his present wife, and since that time he had been a loser in almost every financial undertaking. He sent Mrs. Stevenson on a visit to her family in Michigan, and shortly afterward a letter was forwarded to her, in which he was charged with all kinds of social offences. It was anonymous, but subsequent investigations proved to the wife that she could not live longer with her husband. A divorce was had, and about a month later he married the second Mrs. Stevenson, a handsome, clever, shrewd lady, who has admitted on the stand that the anonymous letter was in her handwriting. The Governor bought big blocks of land in San Diego county during the boom, and lost two or three hundred thousand dollars there. Then he got into some worthless mines, among them the Lady Bryan, that promised such wonderful returns for the tremendous amount he paid. He was in the Kentucky, and I believe had a difficulty with some of the shareholders, who demanded an accounting. It cost him a large sum. His speculations were never well-timed, and if his estate is worth over $40,000 now I would be very much surprised. His two sons, by his will, were cut off with a thousand each; it is said there was a codicil, giving them a larger amount; and experts who have examined the document say that there are evidences of a part of the will having been destroyed. A Well-Read Advertisement.

People are prone to say "nobody reads advertisements." Right there is where they make a mistake. These very people read advertisements themselves. A few weeks ago an enterprising grocer, J. J. Jackson, put in his advertisement a curious sort of puzzle. It really has no correct solution, but scores of people have handed in solutions of the problem. We have received letters from all parts of the State offering solutions, and Mr. Jackson has received a great many. It shows that advertisements are read. A gentleman said to us the other day: "I wish you would put Henry Lanes local ad. in some corner and keep it there. You move it about at every issue. Why sir I have read that local a hundred times at least." Nevada City Herald.

Walcott's Estate.

The Virginia Chronicle of Friday says: Orville J. Walcott, who died in Gold Hill on the 16th inst., was buried yesterday from his late home near the Baltic Switch. He left an estate worth $10,000, and being without kin, he portioned out his treasures to his friends.

A party of Boston capitalists arrived in Reno Friday on their way to Esmeralda county to examine the Montezuma mine.
